How can I create a function that will return an arbitrary list of arguments, as a list, and not print the arguments? How can I have the function return a list of strings, instead of a list of args? A: You can use a default parameter: def sample1(arg1=None, *args): if not arg1: arg1 = 'hello' print(' arg1 is {}'.format(arg1)) print('args are {}'.format(args)) return [arg1] + args Example: >>> sample1('hello','world','foo') arg1 is hello args are ['world', 'foo'] ['hello', 'world', 'foo'] A: You could use the *arg syntax for partial unpacking: def sample1(*args): print(' arg1 is {}'.format(args[0])) print('args are {}'.format(args[1:])) or you can just return args and drop the second parameter: def sample1(*args): return
